2010 CARWH Conference Student Day May 27, 2010 9:00 to 5:00

Pre-Conference Student Day

As part of the 2010 CARWH Conference, a pre-conference Student Day is being planned. Join us for an informative full-day session geared to students conducting research in the work and health arena.

The morning session will include a presentation on the significance of research ethics, followed by an exercise where you will discuss work and health research methods that may present ethical concerns.

There will also be a panel of staff from funding agencies who will present information about funding available for graduate students and their projects. In addition, some students will provide testimonials of their experiences in obtaining funding.

In the afternoon, you will work in small groups facilitated by current academics/researchers. You will discuss a work and health paper in detail. Then based on the paper's contents, you will develop a novel research project as a next logical step in increasing understanding of the issues.

Lunch and refreshments will be provided.

This is an excellent opportunity to get to know other students and mentors in your field.

You can register for the Student Day when the general CARWH registration opens in mid-January 2010 at <http://carwh2010.iwh.on.ca>.
